

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFATORY NOTE TO PART III.

THIS Part concludes BA-, and contains the whole of BE-, BI-, BL-, and BO-. It deals with 8765 words*, and includes a number of articles of special interest, and several of great difficulty. It is a characteristic of the letter B (shared only by some of the smaller letters further on in the alphabet) that it contains a comparatively small number of words derived from Latin or Greek, and a preponderating proportion of words of Teutonic origin, first of the native Old English stock, and secondly of the early accessions which this received from the kindred speech of the Norsemen. Hence this section includes many of the oldest words of the language, which are also among the most important, practically, of its living elements. Some of these have, during their long currency, branched out into vast ramifications of meaning, which it costs the lexicographer much labour to disentangle, and then taxes all his ingenuity to display in something like a lucid and intelligible arrangement. In illustration of this one need only refer to the verbs BE, BEAR, BEAT, BEND, BIND, BLESS, BLOW, BOW, the substantives BEAD, BED, BELL, BILL, BLADE, BOARD, BODY, BOND, BOOK, BOOT, BOW, BOWL, BOX, the adjectives BETTER, BEST, BIG, BLACK, BOLD, BOTH, all of which have come down to us from Old English or even Old Teutonic times. And these are reinforced by a considerable array of words from Old French, many of which, as BATTLE, BEAST, BEAUTY and its English family, BEEF, BILL, BLUE, BONNET, BORDER, BOSS, BOUND, BOWL², are now no less 'native', and of no less practical importance, than the Teutonic words; while others, as BELDAME, BELFRY, BE¹ER, BIAS, BIBLE, BOMB, BOTCH, BOWEL, have a history full of interest. This Part also contains the long list of words, chiefly verbs and their derivatives, compounded with the prefix BE-. These number, current and obsolete, nearly 1500; and, if all had been set forth in their alphabetical places as main words, they would have taken up more space than could well be allotted to them. It has seemed sufficient, therefore, that all those words (about 850) which appear to require separate treatment, whether on account of their meaning, long history, or frequent modern use, should be treated in their alphabetical order among other words; the remainder (nearly 600) of rare or single occurrence, trivial importance, or obvious meaning (e.g. bebooted, bemuslined, beperiwigged, bebishop, becarpet, becobweb, bedirty, bedrizzle, beduchess), being arranged in groups under the various uses of the prefix BE-, where each can be studied in connexion with other words of similar formation; each is also provided with at least one quotation, so as to show by whom and in what connexion it has been used.

In the Etymology much more original work has had to be done than in the two preceding parts. The B- words are full of problems which have baffled the efforts of all investigators: every one of these has received a fresh and independent investigation, in which assistance has been rendered by some of the first living philologists; and the result has been the discovery of new facts, or the elimination of old errors, in regard to many words. In addition to the words of Old English and Old French origin, and the numerous terms of more recent adoption, and more or less known source, as beltane, blatant, bog, boomerang, boor, bosh, boycott, this Part contains an extraordinary number of words of unknown or uncertain derivation. Many of these have no kin in other languages, but stand quite alone in English, and, it cannot be doubted, are more or less recent creations of English itself—instances of onomatopoeia in its true etymological sense of 'name-creation'. For B contains many illustrations of the fact that has of late years powerfully impressed itself upon philological students, that the creative period of language, the epoch of 'roots', has never come to an end. The 'origin of language' is not to be sought merely in a far-off Indo-European antiquity, or in a still earlier pre-Aryan yore-time; it is still in perennial process around us. A literary language, with its more accessible store of words already in use and sufficient for all ordinary requirements, its more permanent memories and traditions, its constant appeals to an authoritative precedent—'Where did you find that word? Is it in the Dictionary? Is it English at all? Can you cite it from any of the masters of English Prose?'—is hostile to word-creation. The new word is apt to die almost as soon as born, ashamed of its own newness, ashamed of the italics or inverted commas which apologize for its very existence, or question its legitimacy. But such is not the case with language in its natural state, where words are estimated simply as they serve their purpose of communicating the thought or feeling of the moment, and where memory, and tradition, and precedent are only contributories to the fulfilment of this function. The unwritten dialects, and, to some extent, even slang, and colloquial speech, approach in character to language in its natural state, aiming only at being expressive, and treating memory and precedent as ministers, not as masters. In the local dialects, then, in slang, in colloquial use, new vocables and new expressions may at any time be abruptly brought forth to serve the needs of the moment, in accordance with feelings of inherent natural fitness, of imitative suggestiveness, or of subtle instinctive analogy with groups of words or parts of words already familiar. Some of these pass at length from colloquial, into epistolary, journalistic, and, finally, into general literary use, or from the colloquy of the novel into the literary composition of the novelist, and are registered in the dictionary as 'new words', the origin of which is searched for as vainly in the 'word-hoard' of Old English speech, or even the fullest vocabulary of Indo-European roots, as in a school-manual of Latin and Greek roots and affixes. The dialect Glossaries abound in words of this kind; and among those to be found in these pages, bam, bamboozle, bang, bash, bilk, binge, birl, birsle, birr, blab, blabber, blad, blare, blash, blatter, blar, bleb, blight, blizzard, blob, blore, blot, blotch, blowse, blub, blubber, bludgeon, bluff, blunder, blunt, blur, blurt, bluster, bluther, blutter, bob (in some senses), bodge, bogus, boodle, boom (in some senses), bore, bosh, bother, bounce, box (a blow), are words which cannot be traced to any ancient 'roots', but are, for the most part at least, examples of more or less recent word-creation.

* Of these 8765 words, 5323 are Main Words, treated each in detail in a separate article; 1873 are Combinations or Compound Words, explained and illustrated in connexion with the main words which form their first elements; 1569 are Subordinate entries chiefly of distinct forms of words likely to be referred to by readers, here explained by a single word, and referred to the Main word to which they belong. Of the 5323 Main words, 3802 are in current use, 1379 are marked (+) as Obsolete, and only 142 as (||) foreign or imperfectly naturalized.

In the preparation of this Part much voluntary assistance has to be acknowledged. The following portions, before being taken in hand by the Editor and his staff in the Scriptorium, were sub-edited by the gentlemen, and the lady, whose names are appended:—

Many friends have aided in the investigation of the history of particular words*. Mr. H. Hucks Gibbs, M.A., and the Rev. J. B. Johnston, B.D., have day by day revised the proofs, and communicated important additions or emendations; Mr. Fitzedward Hall, D.C.L., has, as a gratuitous service to the history of the language, devoted four hours daily to the critical examination of the proof-sheets and the filling up of deficiencies whether in the vocabulary or the quotations: there is scarcely a page which he has not thus enriched by his contributions. Prof. Eduard Sievers, of Tübingen, has continued his voluntary help in revising and annotating the etymologies of the Teutonic words, to the accuracy of which he has made many contributions; M. Paul Meyer, of Paris, Member of the Institute, has given his help in all articles dealing with difficult points of French etymology. Prof. Rhys, of Oxford, has given constant assistance in Celtic, in which help has also been contributed by the Rev. D. Silvan Evans (whose new Welsh Dictionary will make an epoch in Welsh Lexicography), and Prof. Mackinnon of Edinburgh. Mr. W. R. Morfill, M.A., of Oriel College, Oxford, has contributed valuable help in the treatment of words of Slavonic origin. For various words etymological hints have been contributed by Prof. Skeat, and the Rev. A. L. Mayhew, M.A., Oxford. To the names, previously mentioned, of scholars who have courteously given their assistance on various points, are to be added those of the Very Rev. the Dean of Canterbury, the Rev. Professor Sanday of Exeter College, the Rev. Dr. C. Bigg, of Christ Church, Prof. Sir M. Monier-Williams, the Rev. Professor Legge, Mr. J. T. Platts, M.A., of the Indian Institute, Oxford; Dr. John Percy, 1 Gloucester Crescent, Paddington; Prof. Lapworth of the Mason Science College, Birmingham; Dr. De Vries, Leiden. The help of all these is gratefully recognized.

Mr. Henry Bradley, whose valued assistance I have to acknowledge in the etymology as far as p. 1000, has since cooperated with me in editing the words from BORE to BOUNDEN. Mr. A. Erlebach, B.A., has continued to revise and annotate the proofs. The assistants in the Scriptorium who have been engaged on this Part are Messrs. John Mitchell, G. F. H. Sykes, B.A., Walter Worrall, B.A., F. E. Bumby, A. T. Maling, B.A., R. H. Lord, M.A., and C. G. Balk, whose zealous cooperation I desire to acknowledge.

Beazeley for various architectural terms; Miss Edith Thompson, Black Prince, and many historical terms; the Rev. C. B. Mount, Blackguard, and several of the compounds of Black; Dr. E. B. Aye, ay (ai, ai), interj. (adv.), sb. Forms: 6-8 I, 7 al, 7-9 ey, 7- aye, ay. [Appears suddenly about 1575, and is exceedingly common about 1600; origin unknown. The suggestion that it is the same as AY adv. 'ever, always,' seems set aside by the fact that it was at first always written I, a spelling never found with AY. But it may have been a dialect form of that word, from some dialect in which it had passed through the senses of always, in all cases, to by all means, certainly, yes (cf. aye but, in sense 2 b; and the history of ALGATE), and so have been taken in literary English for a different word. It is less easy to see in it a phonetic variant or dialect form of ya 'yea, yes.' Spelt both aye and ay: the former is in accordance with parliamentary usage, and better on every ground. Aye and eye (which many identify in pronunciation, and which differ at most only in the 'broader' or more back sound of eye, are analogous diphthongal words usefully distinguished by their final e from the regular pronunciation of -ay, -ey, in bay, day, gay, hay, etc., and bey, dey, grey, they, convey, etc.: see AY.]

(13th c.), mod. babouin, or ad. med.L. babewynus (used in England 1295, see Du Cange), found also in the forms babouinus, babouynus, babwynus (some, if not all, of which are merely latinized from F. or Eng.); = It. babuino, Sp. babuino. French has also babion, treated by Littre as a distinct word, but in Eng. identified with baboon, and the source of L.G. bavian, Du. baviana, HG. pavian, baboon. The earlier history of the word is unknown.

Diez suggests connexion with F. babine the thick lip of a cow, dog, monkey, compared with dial. Ger. bäppe muzzle. Scheler, from its application also to children, refers it to same root as babe or It. babbolo, etc.; others compare med.L. papio (see PAPIOUN), a kind of wild dog mentioned by Jac. de Vitriaco, and Maundeville. Finally we may compare OF. babau, babou, baboue, babouye, a grimace, a 'mouth', faire la baboue 2, to make mouths at. According to Daunon (Hist. Lit. xvi. 39), in 13th c., med.L. babuinare meant 'to paint marginal figures in MSS.', and F. babouin was equivalent to humorioso; in the earliest known F. quotation in Le Dit des xxiii manières de vilains (13th c.), li vilains babuins is a simoleon or ninny, who gapes at the statues in front of Notre Dame while his purse is cut from behind. The original meaning, and the order of the senses, thus remain quite uncertain.]

bachelor = Pr. bacalar, It. baccalare = L. type baccalaris*, of doubtful origin. The later F. bachelier is corrupted in the termination, as is the 16th c.

Eng. bachelour, bachelor: cf. ANCESTOR, and see -OR. The original meaning being uncertain, the sense-development is also doubtful.

Of med. L. baccalaris only a few late instances occur (in sense 1), which might be from the mod. langs. (see Du Cange, Baccalaris). It was, however, prob. connected with baccalaris, a division of land, of which the size and nature varied at different times, and with the adjectives baccalaris, aria, applied in 8th c. to rustics male and female who worked for the colonus or tenant of a mansus. (See Deloche, Cartulaire de Beaulieu Introd. éclairc. xxii.) But the precise relation of baccalaris to these words, and its subsequent history are still uncertain. Still more doubtful is its derivation: baccalaria is with some probability referred to bacca, late L. and Romanic for vacca cow, through baccalis* (cf. ovilis from ovis sheep), in which case it might be 'grazing farm,' and baccalaris one employed on it, the assistant of a colonus who had not a mansus of his own; Littre (without accounting for the sense) suggests Celtic bacall stick (a. L. baculus); the Welsh bach 'little' must be definitely discarded, its old Celtic form being bicc- or becc-, Irish becc. (Thurneysen.)

Back-in comb. is used in many relations, substantive, adjective, and adverbial (rarely verbal), often difficult to separate, and in various senses. In some of these the combination is very loose, the use of the hyphen being almost optional.

This is especially the case, when back is capable of being viewed as an adj., in which aspect the hyphen would not be used, e.g. back-yard or back-yard, back-stroke or back-stroke. As a rule, the use of the hyphen implies that the combination (in the case in point) has not the general and purely descriptive value of the two words, but is in some respect specialized or appropriated as a specific name.

Bad (bæd), a. (and sb.) Also 4-6 badd(e). [ME. badde appears in end of 13th c., rare till end of 14th: see below. Regularly compared badder, baddest, from 14th to 18th c. (in De Foe 1721), though Shakspeare has only the modern substitutes worse, worst, taken over from evil, ill, after bad came to be = evil.

Prof. Zupitza, with great probability, sees in bad-de (2 syll.) the ME. repr. of OE. bæddel 'homo utriusque generis, hermaphrodita,' doubtless like Gr. ἀνδρόγυνος, and the derivative bædling 'effeminate fellow, womanish man, μαλακός, applied contemptuously; assuming a later adjectival use, as in yrming, wrecca, and loss of final l as in mycel, muche, lytel, lyte, wencl, wenche. This perfectly suits the ME. form and sense, and accounts satisfactorily for the want of early written examples. And it is free from the many historical and phonetic difficulties of the derivation proposed by Sarrazin (Engl. Studien VI. 91, VIII. 66), who, comparing the etymology of madde, mad, earlier amade: -OE. gemædd (see AMAD), would refer badde to OE. gebædd, 'forced, oppressed,' with a sense-development parallel to that of L. captivus, 'taken by force, enslaved, captive,' It. cattivo, F. chétif, 'miserable, wretched, despicable, worthless.' No other suggestion yet offered is of any importance; the Celtic words sometimes compared are out of the question.]

One who buys corn and other commodities and carries them elsewhere to sell; an itinerant dealer who acts as a middleman between producer (farmer, fisherman, etc.) and consumer; a cadger, hawker, or huckster. Still common in the dialects.

By Act 5 and 6 Edw. VI. c. 14 § 7 Badgers were required to be licensed by the Justices (the origin of the hawker's licence). Among the commodities in which they are said to have dealt are named corn (especially), fish, butter, and cheese. They were obnoxious to the charge of regrating, and hence the word is in some 17th c. vocabularies, e.g.
Robertson's Phrasol. Gen. (1906), explained as 'an ingrosser, a forebuyer, or forestaller of the market, one that buyeth corn and other provisions beforehand.'

[Note. Conjectures as to the derivation, and possible connexion with next word, depend greatly upon the original meaning. On the assumption that this was 'corn-merchant', bager, badger, has been identified with obs. F. bladier, 'a Marchant or Ingrosser of corne', Cotgr. (properly Provencal = OF. blaiier, blayer); but this is phonetically inadmissible.
If, however, we assume bager to represent a *ME. blager, with 1 unaccountably lost, this might represent an OF.
blaagier*, f. blange (blange, bladage) harvest, corn-supply;
feudal due paid in corn, f. ble, bled in med. L. bladum corn, wheat. (See H. NICOL Proc. Philol. Soc. 19 Dec. 1879.)
But no such links between F. blange and Eng. bager are found either in F. or Eng.; so that there is positively no evidence connecting badger with any deriv. of F. ble. And indeed a consideration of the whole (46) quotations which we have for the word leads to the conviction that the bager, badger, had no essential connexion with corn, any more than the lader, kidder, or carrier, named along with him in the statutes, proclamations and law-books. At present it is most in accordance with the facts to take badger as the agent-noun from BADGE v.]

Badger (bædʒə), sb. Also 6 bageard, 6-7 badgerd. [Only mod. Eng.: of doubtful origin. Prob. (as E. Müller suggests) from BADGE sb. + -ARD, in reference to the white mark borne like a badge on its forehead: cf. for the sense BAUSON and BALL sb. 3, for the formation BALLARD.]

Most etymologists have assumed the identity of this with the prec. word, citing the presumed analogy of the mod. F. name of the quadruped, blaireau, in 15th c. blereau, taken as a dim. of blair, meaning 'little corn-merchant or corn-hoarder', an appellation arising out of popular notions of the habits of the animal, 'which, it is said, makes away with much buck-wheat' (Littre). But this derivation seems to be erroneous. No OF. blair, representing a L. bladarius, from bladarius, is found. And it seems certain that OF. blairiau (12-13th c.), later blereau, blaireau, in Flanders blairiau, blairiau, in Normandy blérel, blérel, compared with OF. blair, blaire 'the bald-coot', mod. F. dial. (Flanders, Picardy) blair, blaire, (Normandy) blérel, must be referred to MDu. and Flem. blair 'bald', MDu. blare, Flem. blare, Du. blaar 'a white spot on the forehead of an animal'. Blairiau thus corresponds exactly to bauson, and its analogy strongly favours the derivation of badger from badger.

A plantigrade quadruped (Meles vulgaris), intermediate between the weasels and the bears, found in Europe and Middle Asia; it is a nocturnal, hibernating animal, feeding on small mammals, game, eggs, fruit, and roots, and digging for itself a burrow, which it defends fiercely against attack, biting and maiming dogs with its powerful jaws. Earlier names were brock, and bauson; also gray. The Indian and North American species differ but slightly from the European.

Baffle (bæ'f'l), v. Forms: 6 baffull, 7 baffol, -oul, -ul, -il(l), -el, 6-9 baffle. [Etymology, and even immediate source, uncertain. Quoted in 1548 as Scotch, and in 1570 used by a Scotchman. Hence, naturally to be compared with Sc. bauchle, found in senses 1-3, from a century earlier, but itself of uncertain derivation. On the other hand we have F. beffler (Cotgr.) 'to deceive, mocke, or gull with faire words,' etc. (cf. sense 4), and ba-fouer, in Cotgr. baffouer, 'to hoodwinke; to deceive; to besmeare; also to baffle, abuse, reuile, disgrace, handle basely in tearmes, give reproach-ful words of or vnto.' Of these, beffler (in Kabelais 1533-53) is easily referred to OF. befe, befle mockery, beffer to mock, beferie quibbling, deceit, = It. beffa, Sp. befa, OSP. and Pr. bafu, mockery, banter, It. beffare, Sp. befar, Pr. bafar, to mock, deride (which M. Paul Meyer would derive from Pr. baf! interjection expressing disdain), with which words also (though less securely) Diez and others connect hafouer, cited first from Montaigne, 1588-92. It is possible that two or even three distinct words are confused under baffle.]

Bail (bɔɪl), sb. 1 Also 5 bayl, baill, 5-7 bayle, 6-7 bayl, bale, baile. [In senses 1 and 2, a. OF. baill 'power, custody, jurisdiction,' and 'delivery,' n. of action f. baillier, in its senses of 'take charge of, guard, control,' and 'hand over, deliver' (see BAIL v.). The remaining senses are peculiarly English, and their development not quite certain. But from the Latin phrase tradere in ballium alicui, found 1259, and the AF. lesser en bail (1331), it seems that bail was originally related to sense 1, and meant the 'custody or charge' (i.e. of the surety); cf. also the equivalent mainprise, manucaplio. But it must soon have been associated in meaning with sense 2, and the AF. baillier to deliver (chattels), since already in 16th c. it was explained as 'the delivery or handing over of the accused to his surety,' whence transferred to the security in consideration of which he was so delivered, and finally to the surety himself who became or gave security for his reappearance in court when called for judgment. There is nothing approaching these senses in Fr., while, on the other hand, the Fr. sense 'lease' is not in English.

Fr. bail, the n. of action, must be carefully distinguished from bail 'governor, ruler, tutor, guardian' (= Pr. baile, Sp. baile, Pg. baile, It. baile, balio = L. bajulus), never adopted in English (though sometimes erroneously stated to be the direct source of sense 6). Bail = bajulus was the primary word; thence the vb. baillier = bajulare; thence again the n. of action bail formed in French, and adopted in English. (The word is discussed by COKE 4th Inst. 178.)

6. The person or persons who procure the release of a prisoner from the custody of the officer arresting him, or from prison, by becoming surety for his appearance in court for trial.

The bail now becomes answerable with his money, but formerly he might have to give his own person as security, whence the phrase to be or become bail, i.e. security, as opposed to give or put in bail of sense 5.

7. In consequence of the transition of meaning in senses 3-6, many phrases are current which are not easily analysed.

To say that the magistrate bails the prisoner (see BAIL v. 2) is now somewhat old-fashioned. Generally, the magistrate admits bail, admits to bail, allows bail, or (occasionally) holds to bail, or takes bail. I have also seen grants bail. The regular phrase of the Statute-book is, I think, 'the magistrate may admit him to bail.' In 45 Geo. III. c. 92, the magistrate also takes bail, the prisoner gives bail. Bail is also offered by the prisoner, and may be refused by the magistrate; on the day appointed his bail surrender, render, bring in, or produce him in court, or the accused surrenders to his bail. In the latter phrase, there is a notion of his delivering himself up in discharge of the recognizances into which he himself, as well as his sureties, has entered, for his appearance. This idea also colours the later use of hold to bail, admit to bail. (F. W. Maitland.)

7. Comb. Bail-bond, the bond or security entered into by a bail; bail-piece: (see quot.).

Bail (bɔɪl), v. 1 Forms: 5-7 bayl(e), 6 bale, baal, 6-7 baile, 6-bail. [a. OF. baillier, baillier, bailler (= Pr. baillar): = L. bajulare 'to bear a burden, to carry,' afterwards 'to carry on, manage, rule,' and 'to be guardian or tutor,' whence baillier ranged in OF. from 'bear, carry, handle, treat, manage, conduct, govern, control, rule, take charge of, guard,' to 'take hold of, receive, take, take away,' and 'hand over, deliver, give.' From the last of these arose the Anglo-French legal sense of 'deliver,' narrowed down in use to 'deliver on trust on certain conditions.' Sense 2 is probably immediately from BAIL sb. 1 3, 4, as if short for 'let to bail, admit to bail,' but clearly influenced by AF. bailler in sense 1, so as to make 'deliver' or 'liberate' at length the leading idea. Hence extended from the act of the magistrate to that of the surety, and used in various transferred senses.]

In fact, berne survived in the south to 1300, barn still survives in northern English, and was used by Shakespeare; bairn is the Scotch form (cf. fairn, airm, wairn), occasionally used in literary English since 1700. It is doubtful whether the berne, bearn of some 17th c. Eng. writers was a survival of the early southern form, or a variant spelling of bairn. The pl. bern in Ormin is the ON. börn, hence it is probable that the northern singular barn is as much of ON. as of OE. origin.]

1. A kind of platform projecting from the wall of a house or room, supported by pillars, brackets, or consoles, and enclosed by a balustrade.

[ME. balled, of uncertain origin; in sense 1, apparently a ppl. form from BALL v. or sb., with the sense of 'protuberant or rounded like a ball,' whence possibly 'smooth,' and, as applied to the head, 'hairless.' But the analogy of many words for 'bald' in various langs., in which the sense arises out of that of 'shining, white,' or esp. that of 'having a white patch on the forehead,' as in 'bald-faced stag,' 'bald-coot,' with the actual appearance of this sense in BALL sb. 2, strongly favours the idea that ME. bald was a derivative of the latter (cf. also BALLARD), which is with evident propriety referred to Welsh bâl, as explained under sense 5. The chief difficulty is the rarity of the simple ball, and lack of early instances to prove its Eng. use before the appearance of bald-ed. For the termination, Sievers compares OE. -ede (OS. -odi) used esp. of bodily

Cf. the analogy of MDu. blaer 'bald' and blare, Du. blaar 'white patch on the forehead' of a horse, etc.; also of MHG. blas 'bald,' earlier 'shining,' and blasse 'white patch on the forehead'; also of Du. bles 'bald' and blesse; and see blas in Grimm; also Wedgwood and Skeat. Cf. also Gr. φαλαρός 'bald,' lit. 'white- or shining-pated.' There seems little ground for the suggestion of Kluge that balled represents a lost OE. balled* = barlod, Goth. baslōps*, from OTeut. bas-as BARE.]

4. dial. Filthy, obscene language or writing.

[Cf. 1849 and 1854 in 3.]

[From the evidence at present, the inference is that the current sense was transferred from 1 or 2, either with the notion of 'frothy talk,' or of 'a senseless farrago' or 'jumble of words.' Most etymologists have however assumed 3 to be the original sense, and sought its explanation in the obvious similarity of balder to dial. balder 'to use coarse language,' Du. balderen 'to roar, thunder,' Norwegian baldra, Icel. baldrast, ballvast 'to make a clatter,' and of -dash to the vb. dash in various senses. The Welsh balddor, balddor 'idle noisy talk, chatter,' has also been adduced. Malone conjectured a reference to 'the froth and foam made by barbers in dashing their balls backward and forward in hot water.' Other conjectures may be found in Wedgwood, Skeat, and E. Müller. Almost confined to poetry from OE. downwards; in ME. it seems to have derived fresh vitality from the ON. böl (pronounced bpl), whence also its alliterative use with bote 'remedy, relief,' and bete 'to relieve.' More of English origin, perhaps, is its alliterative opposition to bliss. Marked obsolete in dictionaries soon after 1600, and rare thence to the present century, when its undefined vague sense of evil has made it a favourite word with the poets.]

[Now found in most of the European langs.; Sw. Da., Fris. Du., L.G. (whence Ger., Russ., Fr.) ballast. Origin doubtful: the oldest form is possibly OSw. and ODa. barlast (before 1400, and regularly in 15th c.), f. bar bare + last load, with the sense of 'bare, naked, or mere load or weight,' i.e. lading which is mere load, lading for the sake of weight merely. Thence ballast, with ll for rl by assimilation, already in 15th c. Sw. and Da., whence in Eng. soon after 1500. The later Da. bag-last 'back-load,' Du. (17th c.) balg-last 'belly-load,' were corrupted by 'popular etymology.' The final t was lost in Flem. ballas, and the 16-17th c. Eng. ballace, -as (first in the vb, where ballast was plausibly analysed as ballast-ed.) Contact of sense further often confused ballace and BALLANCE.

(The form ballast also occurs before 1400 in L.G., and is taken as the original by Schiller and Lübben, who explain it from bal bad (= BALE a.) as bad lading 'schlechte Schiffsfracht, die man nur ladet um dem Schiffe den nöthigen Tiefgang zu geben.' If this is well founded, barlast would rank with bag-, balg-last, as a popular perversion.)

Band (bænd), *sb.*³; also 5-6 bande. [Late 15th c. bande, a. F. bande = Pr., Sp., It. banda, app. adopted from Teutonic (cf. OHG. bant, OS. ON. band: see BAND *sb.*¹; also Goth. bandi: see BEND *sb.*¹). The word received in Romanic a new development of sense, not found in Teutonic, with which it has since been taken back, not only into Eng., but also into Ger. (bande) and Du. (bende, formerly bande); the adoption being facilitated by its obvious connexion with the native words. In Eng., where the pre-existing BAND *sb.*¹, was synonymous with bend, the present word was, by confusion with these, also often written bend. So also in mod. Du. bende for bande, by assoc. with a native bende: see BEND *sb.*¹

The actual history of banda in this sense, and its relation to the Teutonic forms, are not without uncertainty, owing to our ignorance at present of its age, and to the fact that It., Sp., Pg. banda, F. bande, are found also as synonyms of benda, bende 'fascia' (which, except in It., they have now indeed superseded), while conversely Littré's earliest example of bande 'troop' is spelt bende, thus showing at least form-association between the two words. And some actually identify them: Du Cange says that the company of soldiers formed by Alfonso of Castille was called a banda, from the red banda or ribbon worn by them as a sash; and the new ed. of the Vocab. della Crusca explains banda as 'Company of soldiers, because originally distinguished by a banda or band of cloth of a certain colour.' But Littré refers banda, bande 'troop' to late L. bandum BANNER; and Du Cange shows med. L. bandus in sense both of 'fascia', and of 'company of men collected under a certain leader or banner', thus associating all three notions. Whatever the original source, it is evident that the popular feeling associated benda, banda, 'fascia', stripe, sash, scarf, ribbon, 'banda', 'company, troop', and bandum 'banner'.

[ME. banke, prob. a. Old Norse banke*, banki* = Old Icelandic bakki ridge, eminence, bank of clouds, of a river, chasm, etc. (whence Da. bakke, Sw. backe, hillock, hill, rising ground, ascent, acclivity):—O Teut. bankom*; cogn. with O Teut. banki-s*, see BANK² and BENCH; the primary sense of bank being probably 'shelf,' natural or artificial, of earth, rock, sand, or wood. The OE. repr. of banki, bakki, would be banca*, bonca*: a compound hō(h)banca in sense of 'heel-bench, couch' actually occurs once in a vocabulary, but this may be, as the sense suggests, one of the class of weak compounds from strong sbs. (cf. andaga from dæg); in any case the senses of ME. banke, as well as its first appearance in the northern dialect, point to its Scandinavian source.]

Bank (bæŋk), sb. 3 Forms: 5-7 banke, 6 bancke, 7 banque, banok, 7-bank. [Early mod. E. banke, a. F. banque, ad. It. banca fem., used side by side, and in same sense, with banco masc.;

ad. Teut. bank, banc, bench: see prec. word. The double form and gender in Romanic, cf. It., Sp., Pg. banco, banca, Pr. banc, banca, F. banc, banche, are apparently original (see med. L. banco, banca, in Du Cange), and due to the double gender of the German: OHG. der, diu banch, MHG. der, die banc, early mod. and dial. G. der, die bank. The original meaning 'shelf, bench' (see BANK 1 and 2, and BENCH) was extended in It. to that of 'tradesman's stall, counter, money-changer's table, mensa argentaria, τράπεζα', whence 'money-shop, bank,' a use of the word which passed, with the trade of banking, from Italy into other countries. In this sense, It. uses both banco and banca, Sp. and Pg. the masc. banco; but in F. the It. fem. banca was adapted as banque, whence Eng. banke, bank. The word is thus ultimately identical with BENCH and BANK 2, and cognate with BANK 1.

(Although, in It., monte 'mount, heap, amount, stock,' was used in some of the senses of 'bank,' the notion that the name banco, banca, originated in a German rendering of monte is erroneous: G. bank had no such sense as 'mount, heap,' only that of 'bench, shelf.' Rather is it the fact, that in the development of banking, the banco of the money-changer, and the monte or 'joint-stock capital' were at length combined, and bank applied in Eng. to both.)

Its duties are to manage the service of the public debt, to receive and account for the revenue when collected, and to provide and attend to the automatically regulated issue of legal tender notes. Its banking business is of the same nature as that of the other joint-stock or private banks, its chief customer being the Government.

1. prop. A piece of stout taffeta, or other cloth, attached by one side to the upper part of a long pole or staff, and used as the standard of an emperor, king, lord, or knight, under (or after) which he and his men marched to war, and which served as their rallying-point in battle; hence, that of a country, nation, army, or company. Phrases: To join the banner of, follow the banner of. In the literal sense, now chiefly historical; in poetry and elevated prose, applied to the standard or flag of a country; common in figurative expressions.

Heraldically, a banner means a square or quadrangular flag, displaying the arms of the person in whose honour it is borne, and varying in size from that of an emperor, six feet square, to that of a knight banneret, three feet square. In this sense we still commonly speak of the banners of the Knights of the Garter, in St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

2. An ensign or flag bearing some device, borne in a procession, religious, civic, or political, for purposes of symbolism or display. (Sometimes specifically restricted to an ensign other than an ordinary flag, e.g. one extended in a frame, one attached by its upper edge or supported by two staves, so as to remain open.)

Of these the earliest were the religious banners, usually those of patron saints, which were often carried to battle, and there served as banners in sense 1. The banners of guilds and city companies, also partook of both characters.

Banneret (bæ'nɛrɛt). Forms: 3-6 baneret, 5-6 banret, 4-6 (Sc.) banrent, 7 bannerent, banarite), 4- banneret; pl. 4-6 -ettes, -ettes. [ME. baneret, a. OF. baneret, f. banrière, with early ending of pa. pple. :-L. altus; lit. 'bannered.']

1. a. Originally, a knight able and entitled to bring a company of vassals into the field under his own banner, and who ranked next to a baron and above other knights: in this sense commonly used substantively, as a title of rank or dignity, and contrasted with knight, though sometimes with bachelor. b. Subsequently, the title and rank were conferred for valiant deeds done in the king's presence on the field of battle (perhaps, also, on other occasions or for other grounds), and, with the decay of the feudal system, came to constitute merely a rank or order of knighthood: in this use occur both banneret and knight-banneret, the latter opposed to knight-bachelor. On the institution of the order of baronets in 1611, precedence was given to these over all bannerets 'except such as were made in the field, under the banner, the king being present,' and after this the order of knights-bannerets was allowed to die out.

Note. The original sense was mainly French; 'in England there were few tenants bringing any considerable number of men who were not of the rank of the barons' (Penny Cycl.); the first recorded instance of use b. is in the 15th year of Edward III, when John de Copeland was made a banneret for his capture of King David Bruce at Neville's Cross. In the claim of Baronets to precedence (in 1612) it is said 'there are not Bannerets now in being and peradventure never shall be'; and although the title has been claimed for certain persons knighted since that day, heraldic authorities do not admit the validity of the claim. See the matter discussed in Nicolas' Hist. Knighthood (1842) i. pp. xxii-xxiii. In later times an explanation of the name was sought either in its being conferred on the field 'under the banner,' or in the alleged fact that at its bestowal the knight's pennon was symbolically cut square to banner shape.

-ok, 7 -ack, 6 -ock, (9 Sc. banno', banna, dim. bannockie). [a. Gael. bannach, fad. L. pānī-cium f. pānis bread.]

1. The name, in Scotland and north of England, of a form in which home-made bread is made; usually unleavened, of large size, round or oval form, and flattish, without being as thin as 'scon' or oat-cake. In Scotland, bannocks are usually of barley- or pease-meal, but may be of wheaten flour; in some parts a large fruit cake or bun of the same shape is called a currant-bannock. In north of England the name is sometimes given to oat- or haver-bread, when made thicker and softer than an oat-cake; but local usage varies. (Cf. the dialect glossaries).

Banter (bæntar), sb. [Of unknown etymology: it is doubtful whether the vb. or sb. was the earlier; existing evidence is in favour of the vb. The sb. was treated as slang in 1688: Swift, in the Apology to his Tale of a Tub (1710), says that it 'was first borrowed from the bullies in White Friars, then fell among the footmen, and at last retired to the pedants'; in Tatler No. 230, he classes it with bamboozle, country put, and kidney, as a word 'invented by some pretty Fellows' and 'now struggling for the Vogue.' It. barda horse-armour, also pack-saddle, and F. bardelle pack-saddle. These, and the existence of a dial. F. aubarde, seem to identify the word with Sp. and Pg. albarda pack-saddle, referred by Devic to Arab. البردة al-bardasah, i.e. al the + bar-dasah 'stuffed pack-saddle for ass or mule' (Boethor), 'covering placed over the back of a beast to alleviate the pressure of a pack-saddle' (Freytag). Whether the Fr. sense 'defensive armour for a horse' arose out of this is doubtful. Diez has compared ON. bard the beak of a ship, barði a beaked ship, a 'ram', also (poet.) a shield. Also erroneously called BARB, q.v.]

Barge (bārdz), sb. Forms: 4- barge, 4-7 berge, (7 barg). [a. OF. barge (= Pr. barga, c 1180, med.L. barga), of which the L. type might be either barga or bārika*. Diez favours the latter, taking it as a possible derivative of L. bāris, Gr. Bāpis, a kind of boat used on the Nile, an Egyptian word (Coptic bari a little pleasure-boat); but there is no evidence that this word was ever used in the West. As to barga see BARK sb.2

If barge was, as seems certain, the same as barca, BARK sb.3, it was originally a ship's boat, used as a lighter, etc.; in OF., 13th c., we still find 'la barge de la nef' (Littre); cf. senses 2-4. But, as with barca, the name was extended to a boat or small ship with sails; and this was the first use in English: see sense 1. After the introduction (by Caxton) of barque, barke from 15th c. Fr., that word took the place of barge, which, after 1600, is found in the sense of 'ship' only in translators or historians. The modern senses revert more nearly to that of the original barca.]

Bark, barque (bārk), sb. 2 Forms: 5-7 barke, 5- barque, 6- bark. [a. F. barque, 15th c. ad. Pr., Sp., or It. barca:=-L. barca (in Paulinus Nolanus c 400). Not in OFr., where the word used was barge.

Barge and bark are probably identical in origin, and possibly from Celtic; Thurneysen shows that OIr. barc (a fem. a-stem) may, if native, represent an original barga*, with dialectal by-form barca*, which would satisfactorily account at once for OF. barge, and the common Romanic barca. Diez takes barca as an early syncope variant of the conjectural bārīca*, mentioned under BARGE, but as barca occurs c 400 and bārīca* not at all, this is improbable.

As to the original meaning, Isidore, c 640, says 'Barca est, quae cuncta navis commercia ad litus portat. Hanc navis in pelago propter nimias undas suo suscipit gremio.' So Florio (1598) explains It. barca as 'a barke, boate, wherrie, or lighter'; ed. 1611 has 'any kinde of Barke, Barge, or Boate'; Minsheu (1623) explains Sp. barca as 'a great boat, a barke, a skiffe, a hoarse boat'; and Cotgr. (1611) has Fr. barque 'a barque, little ship, great boat.' Cf. BARCK sb. 2-4. The barca was thus apparently, originally, a large ship's boat, used as a lighter; on the Mediterranean, the name continued to be applied to an open boat, even while extended to a small vessel with sails; the latter was the sense with which the word was taken from French into English, and which it still retains both in general and specific use; but in the end of 16th c., the more primitive sense of 'large rowing boat, barge', was reintroduced from the languages of the Mediterranean.]

1. A small ship; in earlier times, a general term for all sailing vessels of small size, e.g. fishing-smacks, xebecs, pinnaces; in modern use, applied poetically or rhetorically to any sailing vessel, 'our gallant bark'; = BARGE 1.

[OE. berlic, of doubtful composition: ber- seems to point to O Teut. baros*, bariz*, 'barley,' the latter of which gave OE. bere (see BEAR sb. 2) with g as proper umlaut of a; the suffix is evidently -lic (see -LY 1), as if barlic meant at first, not hordeum, but hordeaceus.

Barlic first appears attrib. or as adj. in the name Barlic-croft; cf. also BARLEY-CORN. [Of uncertain etymology; the first part has been explained from the prec. word, also from the grain barley, because played in a corn-field, or in a stack-yard (Jam.); the second from break as explained below.] An old country game, varying in different parts, but somewhat resembling Prisoner's Bars, originally played by six persons (three of each sex) in couples; one couple, being left in a middle den termed 'hell,' had to catch the others, who were allowed to separate or 'break' when hard pressed, and thus to change partners, but had when caught to take their turn as catchers. (See poetical description by Sidney in Arcadia i. Lamon's song, and Suckling in Poems (1646) 24.) In Scotland, according to Jamieson, one person had to catch the rest of the company, each of these as taken assisting their captor.

Barnacle (bā'nāk'l), sb. 1. Forms: a. 2 ber-nac, 5 bernak(e), bernag. β. 4-6 bernacle, 5 barnakylle, -alle, byrnacle, (6) barnecke, bur-nacle), 7-8 barnicle, 9 bernicle, 4- barnacle. [ME. bernak, a. OF. bernac 'camus'; of which bernacle seems to be a dim. form: cf. OF. bernicles in Joinville c1275, in sense of the instrument of torture (sense 2) as used by the Saracens, for which Marsh has suggested an oriental origin, comparing Pers. baran-dan to compress, squeeze, baranjah kar-dan to inflict torture. But, so far as evidence goes, I was the earliest sense, and of western origin. The sense of 'spectacles' seems to arise naturally enough from the others, but has been treated by some as distinct, and referred to OF. bericelle (since 15th c. bericelle 'eye-glass,' originally 'beryl':—late L. bericulus*, dim. of berillus, beryllus: it is not easy to trace any phonetic connexion between this and barnacles, even though the mod.F. dialect of Berry has berniques 'spectacles.') naole, 6- barnacle, (7 barnicle, 9 bernicle). [ME. bernecke, berneke, identical with OF. bernaque, med.L. bernaca, berneka. (Other F. forms bernache, barnache; Pg. bernaca, -acha, -icha, Sp. bernache; med.L. also barnaces, bernesta, barneta, perhaps bad spellings). With the β. forms cf. med. or mod.L. ternicla, -ecela, -acula, and mod.F. bernicle, barnacle. Ulterior history unknown.

The earliest attainable forms (omitting barbates in Albertus Magnus and barliates in Vincentius Bellovacensis, which seem too far off) are the Eng. bernecke, Anglo-Lat. bernaca (Giraldus Camb. c.1175), barneta, berneca (Gervase of Tilbury c.1211), berneka (Vincent. Bellovac. 1200-1250). If English, this could only be bare-neck or bear-neck, of which the application is not evident. The history of this word is involved in an extraordinary growth of popular mythology, traced back as far as the 11th or 12th c. by Prof. Max Müller, Lect. Sc. Lang. (ed. 7) II. 583-604. It is there suggested that bernacula might be a variant of bernicula*, a possible dim. of perna 'a kind of shell-fish,' afterwards confused with bernicula*, a supposed aphetic form of hibernicula*, which might be applied to the barnacle-geese from its being found in Hibernia. Others seek the source of the primitive bernaca in Celtic, comparing Gaelic bairneach, Welsh brenig, limpets. But as all the evidence shows that the name was originally applied to the bird which had the marvellous origin, not to the shell which, according to some, produced it, conjectures assuming the contrary seem to be beside the mark. The form bernacle, it will be seen, is not found before 15th c., and bernacula seems to be only its modern Lat. adaptation. If med.L. berneka, bernicla, are earlier, they are suspiciously like erroneous forms of bernecha, bernicka. No connexion with BARNACLE sb. can be traced: bernac was masc., bernaque, -ache fem., in Fr.]

1. A species of wild goose (Anas leucopsis) nearly allied to the Brent Goose, found in the arctic seas (where alone it breeds), and visiting the British coasts in winter.

This bird, of which the breeding-place was long unknown, was formerly believed to be produced out of the fruit of a tree growing by the sea-shore, or itself to grow upon the tree attached by its bill (whence also called Tree Goose), or to be produced out of a shell which grew upon this tree, or was engendered as a kind of 'mushroom' or spume from the corruption or rotting of timber in the water.

2. English name of the pedunculate genus of Cirripedes, which attach themselves to objects floating in the water, especially to the bottoms of ships, by a long fleshy foot-stalk. Sometimes used to include sessile Cirripedes: see ACORN-SHELL.

(This was the 'shell-fish' out of which the Barnacle Goose was supposed to be produced, the long feathery cirri protruded from the valves suggesting the notion of plumage. Giraldus Cambrensis had himself seen more than a thousand of them 'conchyliis testis incluse,' hanging from one piece of timber on the shore.)

The siphon barometer is a curved tube, with the mercury in the shorter limb exposed to the air; it is adapted as the wheel barometer found in ordinary weather-glasses by putting on the mercury in the shorter limb a float with a cord attached, which passes over a pulley, and as the float rises or falls, moves the indicating hand. For very exact readings a lofty tube filled with glycerine is sometimes used. See also ANEROID.)

Baron (bār'ōn). Forms: 2-4 barun, 4 barune, baroune, 4-6 baroun, -own, 5 baroone, barrown, 6 barroun, barne, 7 barron, 3- baron. [Early ME. barun, -oun, a. OF. barun, -on, acc. of ber (= Pr. bar, acc. barōn, barō, Sp. varon, Pg. varão, It. barone):—late L. barō, -ōnem, of which the ordinary sense was 'man' (interchanging in Salic Law with homo), esp. in relation to some one else, as when we say 'the king's man,' passing on one side into 'servant, vassal,' on another into 'man as opposed to slave, freeman,' also as opposed to wife 'husband,' as opposed to female 'male.' Isidore explains Mercenarii, as 'qui serviunt accepta mercede, iidem et barones Graeco nomine, quod sint fortes in laboribus,' (connecting it with barōs); Cornutus (on Persius Sat. v.) explains barones (to which he attributes a Gaulish origin) as 'servos militum, qui utique stultissimi sunt, servos videlicet stultorum.' This seems to point to the cl. L. barō, -ōnem 'simpleton, blockhead, dunce'; but there is nothing else to show whether this is the same word as barō 'man.' The laws of the Alemanni have in the same sense barus: if this were the original form, barō would be an augmentative.

The ulterior origin is unknown. It has been conjecturally referred to a Celtic bar* 'hero' (which seems a figment); OHG. bero:—OTeut. beron*, 'bearer, carrier'; a hypothetical Teut. bar*, with same sense; OE. beorn, 'warrior, brave, hero'; and Teut. bar 'bairn, child'; of which some are purely hypothetical, and others fail to explain the form or sense, or both.]

1. Hist. Originally, one who held, by military or other honourable service, from the king or other superior; afterwards restricted to the former or king's barons, and at length mostly applied to the greater of these (the Great Barons) who personally attended the Great Council, or, from the time of Henry III, were summoned by writ to Parliament; hence, a lord of Parliament, a noble, a peer.

Historically, all who held directly from the king were barons by tenure, such of these as were summoned to Parliament were barons by writ.

2. A specific order or rank, being the lowest grade of nobility.

From the earliest period we find baron distinguished from earl, as the designation of an untitled military tenant; the name may be considered to have itself become a title, as distinct from a description of feudal relationship or of parliamentary privilege, with the creation of barons by patent, which began in the reign of Richard II.

Basket (bā'skət), sb. Forms: 3- basket; also

4-5 basket (e, 5- att, -yt, 6 baskett (e, basquette, 7 basquet. [Origin not ascertained: not in Teutonic or Romanic; found in Eng. since 13th c.

Basket has been conjecturally identified with L. bascauda, used by Juvenal and Martial; by the latter (xiv. 99) given as British, 'Barbara de pictis veni bascauda Britannis, Sed me jam mavult dicere Roma suam.' But the senses anciently assigned to bascauda of washing tub or tray 'vasa ubi calices lavabantur, cacabus,' or bracen vessel 'conchae æreas, genera vasorum' Papias (see Du Cange), do not favour this identification. The word is unknown in Old Irish or Welsh (basgawd is a fignient invented to suggest bascauda), and the mod. Celtic words, Welsh basged, Corn. basced, Ir. basceid, Gael. bascaid, cannot phonetically be descended from an original bascauda, but seem to be simply adopted from Eng. (Prof. Rhys). At present, therefore, there is no evidence to connect basket with bascauda, or to refer it to a Celtic origin.]

Batteillant, -ellant, variant of BATTAILANT a. Battel, obs. form of BATTLE.

Battel (bæt'l), sb. As a separate word only in pl. battels; also 4 battails, 8 battles, 9 battells. [Of uncertain origin: in 16th c. L. batilli, battilli; in the Laudian Statutes batellæ. The etymology of this, with its associated vb., and deriv. batteler, has been the subject of abundant conjecture. Much depends on the original sense at Oxford: if this was 'food, provisions,' it is natural to connect it with BATTLE v.³ to feed, receive nourishment; cf. esp. BATTILING vbl. sb.³, explained by Sherwood (1632) as 'vivres, manger, morche.' But conclusive evidence that battels had this sense is wanting, while already before 1600 it had that of 'debts, sums due to the college for provisions, etc.' The verb however appears to have been sometimes used for 'to take or receive provisions,' i.e. from the college buttry, which brings us close to the senses of BATTLE v.³ 'to feed, take nourishment.' Cf. also the Eton use, and Winchester battlings. On the other hand, sense 3 of the vb. (if the same word) suggests the idea of contributing to a common fund or stock: compare the terms 'commons' and 'commoner.' See BATTELER.

Taking 'accounts' or 'score' as the original sense, some have conjectured battel to be a dimin. of BAT sb.¹ or of F. baille, with sense of 'little staff or stick,' whence perhaps 'tally-stick.' But nothing appears in Med. L., OF., or Eng., to support this conjecture. Reference to Du. betaalen, G. bezahlen 'to pay,' or to the possibility of batilli arising out of a misreading of batilli 'little sticks,' do not fall within the limits of scientific etymology.]

† 1. See quot. (Perhaps a distinct word.) Obs.

c. 1400 Apol. Loll. 76 To cry his day . . . azenis be multide of lawis of þe kirk . . . azen battails, azen reseruacouns, azen fursit frutis, & oþer spolingis of goodis of þe kirk.

2. In Univ. of Oxford: a. College accounts for board and provisions supplied from the kitchen and buttry. b. In looser use: The whole college accounts for board and lodgings, rates, tuition, and contribution to various funds, as 'My last term's battels came to £40.' Also attrib., as battel-bills.

The word has apparently undergone progressive extensions of application, owing partly to changes in the internal economy of the colleges. Some Oxford men of a previous generation state that it was understood by them to apply to the buttry accounts alone, or even to the provisions ordered from the buttry, as distinct from the 'commons' supplied from the kitchen: but this latter use is disavowed by others. See the quotations, and cf. those under BATTLE v. and BATTELER, which bear that battels applied in 17-18th c. to provisions supplied to members of the college individually at their own order and cost, i.e. to battellers, who had no commons, but were charged their 'battels' only, and to commoners as extras 'above the ordinary stint of their appointed commons': but whether the battels were originally the provisions themselves, or the sums due on account of them, must at present be left undecided.

[For the etymology and mutual relations of this and the cognate BATTLE v.3, data are wanting; according to present evidence, the adj. appears earliest, being found in Scotch in 1513. Its form and sense agree with a derivation from *bat, representing ON. bati 'improvement, getting better,' Du. baat 'improvement, advantage, profiting, profit,' referred to under BATTEN v.1; with suffix as in brittle, bruckle, fickle, newfangle, and OE. etol, drincol, witloll. This would give as the primary sense 'given, tending, or fitted, to improve, better, fatten, etc.' All the related words have a smack of Northern origin: 'battle or battile grass' is still common in south of Scotland.

The non-occurrence of bat, while its presumed derivatives, battle, battable, batful, batsome, are so frequent in 16-17th c., is a difficulty; as is also the fact that bat-le, bat-able point to a verbal rather than a substantive base, and yet can hardly have been formed on bat-en.]

Baubee, -bie, variants of BAWBEE.

Baubish, ! for BABISH a.

a 1641 Bp. MOUNTAGU Acts & Mon. (1642) 219 It is as baubish a discourse as the former.

Bauble (bɔːbl). For forms see the senses.

[Probably two original words are here blended: (1) OF. babel, also baubel 'child's toy, trinket, plaything'; whence also the dim. baubelet (Littre, s.v. babiole), beubelet (Godef.), adopted in Eng. at a very early date as BEAUBLET, q.v. The etymology of the F. is uncertain: it is very doubtful whether it can be connected with mod.F. babiole in same sense, which Littre thinks derived from a root bab-, appearing in L. babulus babbler, fool, It. babbeo, babbano silly, Pr. babau fool, and perh. in Eng. baby. (2) ME. babyll, babulle, babie, translated librilla, is evidently connected with bablyn to waver or oscillate, librillare, 'babelynge waver- ing, oscillatio, librillacio'; see BABLE v. 5, BAB- BLING vbl. sb. 3, which has been suggested to be a frequentative derivative of bab or BOB v. It must, in any case, be distinct from the OF. word. But the 'fool's bauble' (see sense 4) may, so far as evidence goes, be from either, according as it was named from its shape or its purpose, or may blend the two notions; it has certainly been associated phonetically and in idea with the 'toy' senses, and has probably coloured the later use of these, in which 'childish' and 'foolish' are united.]

(If sense 1 has no connexion with the 'fool's bauble', it would be better treated as a distinct word under main-form BABLE.)

(For the ulterior etymology there is nothing satisfactory. Conjectures may be seen in Boecher De colorum nominibus equinorum in Roman. Studien vol. I. in Diez, who referred balzano to balza 'border, fringe'; and in Devic (Littré, Suppl.) who has pointed out the striking identity of meaning between bausant and Arab. ablaq, fem. balqa; but notwithstanding this, the forms of the Arabic and Romanic words cannot (at present at least) be phonetically reconciled.)

Bawbee (bō'bf). Sc. Forms: 6 bawbie, babie, 7 babee, baubie, baubye, baubee, 7- bawbee. [Of doubtful origin: it has been conjecturally identified with baby (with which it was sometimes identical in form in 16th c.), derived from basse-pièce (phonetically impossible), and bas billon 'base bullion' or mixed metal, and from the name of a contemporary mint-master, the laird of Sillebawby.]

(The last conjecture is on the whole probable, and is strengthened by the similar origin of the name of the ARCHBISHOP, and perhaps of the BOOLE. The laird of Sille-bawby (notwithstanding his designation, and its suggestion of Siller bawbee) was a real person: on 7 Sept. 1541, Kirkcaldy of Grange, the Treasurer, accounted for amounts 'in argenteo receptis a Jacobo Atkinson, et Alexandro Orok de Sillebawby respective' (Cochran-Patrick I. 60). There is only wanting some direct proof of the abbreviation of Sille-bawby to bawby. The idle surmise that the first issue bore the head of, or was issued by, an infant king, is disposed of by the preliminary fact that 'bawbeis' were first issued in 1541-2 near the close of the reign of James V, and bore no head; moreover there exists no Scottish coin bearing a baby head. Beside the fatal phonetic objection to basse pièce, bas billon, there is not the slightest indication that the bawbeis were ever so called, and coins of billon, or base metal, had been too common for a century and a half in Scotland to make them a novelty in 1541.)

A Scotch coin of base silver equivalent originally to three, and afterwards to six, pennies of Scotch money, about a halfpenny of English coin; hence, in modern use, a halfpenny, a 'copper.'

Bawd (bōd), sb. 1 Forms: 4-5 bauude, 4-7 baude, 4-6 bawde, 6 bawed, 6-7 baud, 6- bawd. [Of uncertain origin: the original sense shows no approach to that of OF. baud, baude, 'bold, lively, gay, merry' (see BAUDE), to which it has often been referred: even allowing that 'gay' might have passed into the sense of 'wanton, licentious, personally unchaste,' no trace of such sense appears either in ME. or Fr.; nor is the Fr. word found as a sb. The earliest instance yet found occurs in Piers Plowman, 1362, where one MS. reads BAWDSTROT. Bawd may not improbably be an abbreviation of that word, which is found in Fr. a century earlier.]

Bay (bē), sb. 1; also 4-7 bays, baie. [a. OF. baie (= Pr. baga) = L. bacca berry.]

In OE. begbeam occurs in the OE. Gospels, and in a glossary of the 11th c. (Wülcker 450) as a rendering of mōdr-rūs; the glossarist adds that mōdr is a name for 'berries' generally, whence beg appears to be = berry. In the 11th c. it might perhaps already be adopted from Fr.; but the Corpus Glossary of the 8th c. (Wülcker 8) has also 'baccinia (= vaccinia) beger' which suggests that this (elsewhere begir) might be an archaic plural of an original -is, -os stem, and that beg was a native word. Its ME. repr. would be bay, but the extant bay appears to be from French.]

Bay (bē), sb. 4; also 4 baile, 5 baye. [Two different words seem to be here inextricably confused. Originally, the phrase to hold at bay seems ad. OF. tenir a bay (Godefroy) = It. tenere a bada, where bay, bada, means the state of suspense, expectation, or unfulfilled desire, indicated by the open mouth (late L. badare to open the mouth); but to stand at bay, be brought to bay, correspond to mod. F. être aux abois, meaning to be at close quarters with the barking dogs, and bay is here apophetically formed from ABAY, a. OF. abai barking. See BAY v. 1. In the phrase at a bay, some early quotations may read at abay.]

I. Barking or baying.

1. The deep prolonged barking of a dog when pursuing or attacking.

II. Most commonly, and often figuratively, in hunting phrases relating to the position of a hunted animal when, unable to flee farther, it turns, faces the hounds, and defends itself at close quarters.

3. Of the position of the hunted animal: To stand, be (abide obs.) at bay, turn to bay; and of the relative action of the hounds: To hold or have at bay, bring or drive to bay, make a bay at (obs.)

Eng.* III. xiv. 256 The spoils of the church furnished the arms by which the Pope... could be held at bay.

Bay (bē), sb.; also 7 baye. [A word of doubtful standing and origin: it may be questioned whether senses 1 and 2 are really connected, and whether the word in the Promp. Parv. is not BAY sb., but sense 2 does not fall easily under any other of the words spelt bay. For the etymology, the ON. bæg-r 'opposition,' has been compared, with its derived vb. bægja 'to push back, hinder'; the latter might be the direct source of the related BAY v., if we could assume the sb. to have been taken from the vb. But if, as seems more likely, the vb. is from the sb., the origin of the latter has still to be discovered.]

(Diez's reference of abayer to L. ad-baudare 'to bark at' is now rejected; recently it has been proposed to connect it with badare, in which case both words would ultimately be from the same source.)

Diez, Littre, Scheler, favour the usual derivation from the name of the city Bayonne, the weapon being supposed to have been either first made or first used there; the former notion is strengthened by a statement of Des Accords (a 1583) that people spoke of bayonnettes de Bayonne 'Bayonne bayonets,' as of 'Toulouse scissors,' etc. But it is possible that the word may be a dim. of OF. bayon, baion 'arrow or shaft of a cross-bow,' from which Cotgr. still has bayonnier 'an old word' = arbalétrier: the Sp. bayona sheath, and It. bajonetta 'little joker' (a possible appellation for a dagger), have also been suggested as the source.

Bay-salt (bā'salt). Forms: 5-6 baye-, 7 bai-, base-, 6- bay-salt. [prob. f. BAY sb. 2.]

Many explanations have been offered. A derivation from Bayonne dates from 1633; but if salt was really imported into England from that place, it would seem more probable that bay-salt meant 'salt from the Bay of Biscay'; cf. 'Cafe wines,' etc. The conjecture that it means salt procured from bays (of the sea) indefinitely, seems less probable, for it would have been more obvious, in this case, to say 'sea-salt.' There seems to be no good authority for the statement that the Cheshire brine-pools are called bays, nor would this explain why one kind of salt should bear the name of bay-salt more than another.]

The Greek word is evidently of oriental origin, but whether it has any relation either of etymology or sense with the Heb. is uncertain, as is also the meaning and origin of the latter, which the LXX had rendered in Genesis by ἀνθράξ 'carbuncle', and in Numbers by κρυστάλλος 'crystal': the Rabbins and Bochart explain it as meaning 'pearl, pearls'.]

Be (bē), v. [An irregular and defective verb, the full conjugation of which in modern Eng. is effected by a union of the surviving inflexions of three originally distinct and independent verbs, viz. (1) the original Aryan substantive verb with stem es-, Skr. as-, Gr. es-, L. es-, OTeut. es-, s-; (2) the verb with stem was-, Skr. vas- to remain, OTeut. was-, Gothic wis-an to remain, stay, continue to be, OS. OE. OHG. wesan, OFris. wesa, ON. ver-a; (3) the stem beu-, Skr. bhū-, bhaw-, Gr. φω-, L. fu-, OTeut. beu-*, beo-, OE. beo-n to become, come to be. Of the stem es-, OE. (like the oldest extant Teutonic) possessed only the present tenses, Indicative and Subjunctive (orig. Optative), all the other parts being supplied from the stem was-, pa. t. was, which, though still a distinct and complete vb. in Gothic, was in OE. only supplemental to es-, the two constituting the substantive verb am-was. Beon, be, was still in OE. a distinct verb (having all the present, but no past tenses) meaning to 'become, come to be', and thus often serving as a future tense to am-was. By the beginning of the 13th c., the Infinitive and Participle, Imperative, and pres. Subjunctive of am-was, became successively obsolete, the corresponding parts of be taking their place, so that the whole verb am-was-be is now commonly called from its infinitive, 'the verb to be', although be is no part of the substantive verb originally, but only a later accretion replacing original parts now lost.

In OE. the present Indic. of am had two forms of the plural, (1) sind, sindon (= Goth. and Ger. sind, L. sunt, Skr. sdnti) and earon, aron (= ON. eru), the latter confined to the Anglian dialects, where it was used side by side with sind, un. Of these, sind, on ceased to be used before 1250, its place being taken in southern Eng. by the corresponding inflexions of be. We, ye, they beth, ben, be, were the standard forms in southern and midl. Eng. for centuries; and even in the sing., be, best, beth began to encroach on am, art, is, and are now the regular forms in southern dialect speech. Meanwhile aron, aren, arn, are, survived in the north, and gradually spread south, till early in 16th c. are made its appearance in standard Eng., where it was regularly used by Tindale. Be continued in concurrent use till the end of the century (see Shakspeare, and Bible of 1611), and still occurs as a poetic archaism, as well as in certain traditional expressions and familiar quotations of 16th c. origin, as 'the powers that be'. But the regular modern Eng. plural is are, which now tends to oust be even from the subjunctive. Southern and eastern dialect speech retains be both in singular and plural, as 'I be a going', 'we be ready'.]

In treating this important word, the history of the inflexions is first exhibited, and then that of the signification.

B. Signification and uses.

[The primary sense appears to have been that of branch II below, 'to occupy a place' (i.e. to sit, stand, lie, etc.) in some specified place; thence the more abstract branch I was derived by abstracting the notion of particular place, so as to emphasize that of actual existence, 'to be somewhere, no matter where, to be in the universe, or realm of fact, to have a place among existing things, to exist.' Branch III was derived from II by weakening the idea of actual presence, into the merely intellectual conception of 'having a place' in a class of notions, or 'being identical with' another notion: 'centaurs are imaginary creatures' = 'centaurs have their place in the class of creatures of the imagination.' Branch IV is an obvious extension of III: cf. 'it was annoying to me,' with 'it was annoying me.']

Be, variant of BEB sb.

Be, obs. and dial. form of BY prep.; see next.

Be- prefix:—OE. be-, weak or stressless form of the prep. and adv. bi (big), BY. The original Teut. form was, as in Gothic, bi, with short vowel, prob. cognate with second syllable of Gr. ἀμφί, L. ambi; in OHG. and early OE., when it had the stress, as a separate word, and in composition with a noun, it was lengthened to bi (bi, bi), while the stressless form, in composition with a vb. or indeclinable word, remained bi-; in later OE., as in MHG. and mod.G., the latter was obscured to be- (also occasional in OE. as an unaccented form of the preposition): cf. OE. bi-geng practice, bi-gangan, be-gangan, to practise. In early ME. the etymological bi-, by- regularly reappeared in comp. as the stressless form; but in later times be- was finally restored. (On the other hand, be was used by northern writers as the separate prep., as still in mod. Sc.) In modern use, the unaccented prefix is always be-; the accented form by- (sometimes spelt bye-) occurs in one or two words descended from OE., as by-law, by-word (OE. bi-lage, bi-word), and in modern formations on the adv., as by-gone, by-name, by-play, by-road, by-stander.

The original meaning was 'about.' In prepositions and adverbs this is weakened into a general expression of position at or near, as in before (at, near, or towards the front), behind, below, beneath, benorth, besouth, between, beyond. With verbs, various senses of 'about' are often distinctly retained, as in be-bind, be-come (= come about), be-delve, be-gird, be-set, be-stir. In such as be-daub, be-spatter, be-stir, be-strew, the notion of 'all about, all round, over,' or 'throughout,' naturally intensifies the sense of the verb; whence, be- comes to be more or less a simple intensive, as in be-muddle, be-crowd, be-grudge, be-break, or specializes or renders figurative, as in be-fall (to fall as an accident), be-come, be-get, be-gin, be-have, be-hold, be-lieve. In other words the force of be- passes over to an object, and renders an intransitive verb transitive, as in be-speak (speak about, for, or to), be-flow (flow about), be-lie, be-moan, be-think, be-wail. Hence it is used to form transitive vbs. on adjectives and substantives, as in dim be-dim, fool be-fool, madam be-madam; also others, in which the sb. stands in an instrumental or other oblique relation, as be-night 'to overtake with night,' be-guile, be-witch. Of these a special section consists of verbs having a privative force, as OE. be-landian, be-lafjadian, to deprive of one's land, one's head: cf. be-reave, and OE. be-nim-an to take away. Finally, be- is prefixed with a force combining some of the preceding, to ppl. adjs., as in be-jewelled, be-daughtered.

Be- being still in some of its senses (esp. 2, 6, 7 below) a living element, capable of being prefixed wherever the sense requires it, the derivatives
